

Question

Would it be possible to post the sermons online?

Answer

Thank you for your question and your idea to improve our service to people. You have a very good idea, one that we have also thought about here at Faith. In fact, we have some members who are right now investigating the possibility of web-streaming the video of our church services. There are copyright considerations, costs, and other practical matters to consider with an idea like this. So it may take us some time to decide what route is best for us and just what kind of services we can offer.

Your question brings up a larger question: What can our members do when they find themselves living far away from their church for an extended period of time? How will their spiritual needs be met? We would like to encourage you to find a church that teaches the pure truth of the Bible near where you are living and get involved there as much as you can. The sermon you hear certainly is important, but there are other things to think about as well: your fellowship with Christians who believe as you do, your regular receiving of the Lord's Supper, your opportunity to help build the Lord's kingdom at the church and in the area you are living in, and we could go on and on.

As you consider what to do, and as we here at Faith do the same thing, may we make a suggestion? You could ask either or both of your pastors to send you a copy of their sermons. With e-mail and other ways to communicate on the internet, it surely wouldn't take much time or effort. We already offer cassette tapes of our church services to our members. If you could benefit from this offer, please tell us as well.

God's blessings to you as you serve him and grow in his grace in a different country. Oh, and your Dad says "hi." He misses you very much.
